Update: Wildland fire at the NNSS

NORTH LAS VEGAS, Nevada – The Southern Bench Fire north of Area 12 continues to burn. Since yesterday, Aug. 31, there has been no change the approximate 1,000 acres impacted on the Nevada National Security Site (NNSS). The additional burning acreage resides on the Nevada Test and Training Range. The NNSS’ Fire & Rescue team will continue to monitor the fire.

The fire is not burning, and has not burned, in any contaminated areas. There is no offsite risk to the public. No structures or assets are in danger. No injuries have been reported.

Please note: Nevada National Security Site lands and airspace are restricted. Access is not available for on-site media coverage on foot or by helicopter.

Further information will be provided as it becomes available on the NNSS Twitter page at https://twitter.com/NNSANevada and Facebook at https://www.facebook.com/NNSANevada.

The NNSS and its related facilities help ensure the security of the United States and its allies by: supporting the stewardship of the nation’s nuclear deterrent; providing nuclear and radiological emergency response capabilities and training; contributing to key nonproliferation and arms control initiatives; executing national-level experiments in support of the National Laboratories; working with national security customers and other federal agencies on important national security activities; and providing long-term environmental stewardship of the NNSS’s Cold War legacy.

The NNSS is managed and operated by Mission Support and Test Services LLC (MSTS). MSTS is a limited liability company consisting of Honeywell International Inc., Jacobs Engineering Group Inc., and HII Nuclear. The NNSS falls under the jurisdiction of the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA), an agency within the U.S. Department of Energy. The Site’s operations are government-controlled and contractor-operated, and are overseen by NNSA’s Nevada Field Office, headquartered in North Las Vegas.
